The Demand of Labor Fairly Stated.

Daily Topics, Topeka, Kansas.

We are told that the producing classes of today enjoy comforts and luxuries, such as the most affluent never dreamed of 100 years ago, and for that reason they ought to be content. But as all this added abundance is the result of the skill and industry of the people, who ought to enjoy it but the people? We can only know whether the producer is poor or otherwise by comparison. One hundred years ago we had no railroads, telegraphs, electric lights, improved machinery and extensive manufacturing establishments. Even fifty years ago, cards, spinning wheels and hand looms were to be found in more than one-half of the farm houses of the country and by these primitive processes more than one-half of the clothing of the people was manufactured. At that time farm products had no market value when they were 100 miles away from market. And yet, as a rule the people had an abundance of food, shelter and raiment, while enforced idleness and under-served poverty, filling the country with tramps, misery, suffering and crime, was unknown. And why? Simply because the industrious worker, while he was not able to produce but a comparatively small fraction of what he produces now with our labor-saving devices was nevertheless enabled to retain for his own use a far greater proportion of the wealth that he did produce. The very fact that the productive power of labor has been increased 75 per cent. is made the means of decreasing, in a far greater ratio, the relative proportion of the product that labor is permitted to retain for its own use. All that productive labor demands is, that it shall receive its full share of the benefits that have been derived from the skill of the mechanic and the discoveries of the scientist.

A Parting Word.

Anthony Advocate.
Good-by, John J. We will miss thee, when thou'rt out upon the sea, when the ocean winds do kiss thee, in their light and sportive glee. When thy ship is rocking, plunging, o'er the crested, foamy deep, we will be in grief indulging, we will for our John J. weep.

Oh! when times are dull and stupid; when 'tis hard to make men laugh, who will fire our minds as you did with a theme for paragraph? And when we are sour or bilious, when 'tis in our souls to scold, who with vinegar will fill us as thou didst, our John J. bold.

Fare thee well, and if forever, then forever fare thee well; yet we cannot from thee sever, ere our sorrow we can tell. Thou wert ever here to give us subjects for a column screed; and the paragrapher will miss thee sadly in his days of need.

Often thou hast raved in passion; often thou hast damned the press, for thou wouldst have it fashion all its ways to thy caress. Au revoir, may heaven bless thee, thou wert not entirely bad; our adieu must not distress thee, our fond parting make thee mad.

Then so long! May angels guide thee in thy trip across the sphere, may the best of luck betide thee; may thy soul be filled with cheer; we must not throw our arms around thee; we must our anguish hide; we must learn to do without thee, John J.; we must let thee slide.

All of our farmers needing money should call on Black & Murrell. They are loaning at the lowest rates and will charge you no commission. 35tf

The Writing On The Wall.

Boston Index.

Carnegie has built a fence around his plant in Pennsylvania and connected an electric battery to the barbed wire which surrounds it; he has built watch towers on the prominent points of his iron works, from which armed Pinkertons will overawe the "rabble" strikers; the master house-smiths in New York have issued a pronouncement against union men, and in our own New England the granite manufacturers and one deluded brewer says "there shall be no organized labor."

This is in the land of the free, the home of reciprocity and protection, the stamping ground of the "honest" dollar and the all-round paradise for men who are adepts in making the workingman believe that two and two make six.
